Biden climate adviser: Social media companies need to censor fossil fuel 'disinformation'

White House Climate Adviser Gina McCarthy told Alexi McCammond of Axios that social media companies need to censor 'disinformation' on green energy.

White House National Climate Adviser Gina McCarthy skewered Big Tech companies for "allowing" disinformation and cheered Congress for "taking action" to enact more censorship last Thursday.

McCarthy, who also served as an Environmental Protection Agency administrator during Barack Obama's presidency, spoke during an Axios event titled "A conversation on battling misinformation."

Axios political reporter Alexi McCammond asked McCarthy how so-called "rampant mis-and-disinformation" around climate change online and in other platforms" has "made your job harder?"

McCarthy responded by slamming social media companies: "We have to get tighter, we have to get better at communicating, and frankly, the tech companies have to stop allowing specific individuals over and over again to spread disinformation. That's what the fossil fuel companies pay for."

She suggested further that "we have to be smarter than that and we need the tech companies to really jump in."

McCammond responded by asking: "Isn't misinformation and disinfo around climate a threat to public health itself?"

McCarthy asserted that it "absolutely" is:

"Oh, absolutely. You know. It's not just denial of this, it's also greenwashing. You have these companies that are claiming to be part of the solution that really are just not informing people about what they're really doing and how they're really investing and how people should be investing their money if they really care about climate."

McCarthy also praised Congress directly for pushing social media companies to censor Americans: "We do see Congress taking action on these issues, we do see them trying to tackle the misinformation that's out there, trying to hold companies accountable."

The Biden administration has a history of asking Big Tech companies to censor Americans in the name of "public health."

Former Biden White House press secretary Jen Psaki declared as much directly in a press briefing last year.

(Drew Angerer/Getty Images)

"So we're regularly making sure social media platforms are aware of the latest narratives, dangerous to public health that we and many other Americans are seeing across all of social and traditional media," Psaki explained. "And we work to engage with them to better understand the enforcement of social media platform policies."

The White House recently proposed a Disinformation Governance Board to tackle these issues. The project was temporarily paused after the board and its leadership were widely panned.

For Pete's sake, they are still trying to disprove the Theory of Relativity. The scientific method requires constant testing of theories. Climate change won't be able to stand up to rigorous testing so they want to outlaw it.

There's no such thing as totally green energy. Even solar power requires solar panels that are almost unrecyclable. The energy it takes to make the panels is more than the energy we get out of them.

Even the batteries require chemicals harmful to the earth to manufacture and they are not recycled ...See more

Let's not even talk about how the raw material are extracted from the earth to make the batteries for the electric car and solar house units. Lithium and cobalt mining is not environmentally friendly either.

Biden has a plan to address that. He is lowering Trump tariffs on solar panels so that the U.S. manufacturers go out of business and we get them from China. This way China has all the pollution. (Edited)

Ok, if a pipeline that carries oil and fuel to depots and storage areas were to stop the transportation of such commodities would have to be done by trucks, rail, or barge. All of which use fossil fuels. Think about that. So, is stating that misinformation?

For one, how can you trust a woman that looks like Bill Clinton and who worked for Obama? Secondly who is to decide what fossil fuel information is false or misleading? Lastly, freedom of speech is not allocated to those who only speak what others view as true. This is communism censorship.
